Roughneck Gorilla Club Hammer

Olympia Tools has a new addition to its range. The Roughneck Gorilla Club Hammer has a shaped steel head which is pointed at one end, creating a domed face said to generate much higher striking forces than a conventional flat face. The other end of the head has also been enlarged enabling greater spread loading of any striking force, whilst a 45° chamfer helps to reduce chips from the substrate being struck. The product is available in two head weights – 1.1kg (2/12lb) and 1.81kg (4lb), and also features two additional striking faces on either side of the head, said to be ideal for hitting softer materials.

XYLEM

ResiBoost

As consumers continue to strive for greater efficiency in the home, Xylem has launched ResiBoost, a variable frequency drive (VFD) that matches system demand to maximise pump efficiency and minimise general wear and tear. Said to be suitable for a wide range of residential applications, it features a plug-and-play device designed for easy installation and use. Users simply connect the VFD to water and electricity and set the desired pressure. The unit automatically controls the speed of the pump while keeping the pressure in the system constant. The manufacturer claims this reduces energy consumption and prevents rapid changes of pressure from damaging pipes, junctions and valves, in order to extend the system's life.
